Programming Philosophy Outside In When programming a DSP system, it is often helpful to follow an "Outside In" workflow. This means that inputs and outputs are created and wired to processing objects before the internal signal routing is added to the design. Inputs Most commonly, this begins with the inputs needed for the system. Each input to the system should be placed and all individual channels should be labeled first. Are you Inside-Out or Outside-In? Designing a Customer ... Outside-in orientation involves walking the process as if you were a customer looking in at the organization through a Customer's eyes, enabling a process focused on the needs of the Customer. Obviously an organization that wants a Customer-focus needs to have an outside-in approach to their processes. The Re:thinking Podcast: Philosophy Outside Academia ... In 390 BCE Socrates stepped into the Agora (what today we might call the town square) and asked his fellow citizens to think deeply about their foundational beliefs concerning life and virtue. Today, our "agora" has moved from the town square to Twitter and those conversations often revolve.
